

Discovering America's Lost City

with James A. Brown, Emeritus Professor, Department of Anthropology Weinberg College of Arts and Sciences, Northwestern University

Photo from Cahokiamounds.org

Wednesday
September 21, 2016
6:30 - 8:00pm

Long before the United States was formed, Cahokia, in what is now southern Illinois, was the biggest city north of Mexico. In its prime, it rivaled London; by 1350 no one remained, and no one knows why.

The Firehouse Grill
750 Chicago Avenue
Evanston

Explore "America's lost city" with Jim Brown, a renown expert in this field, at Wednesday's Science Café. Brown has years of experience researching the Cahokia site and will impart the compelling story of this ancient, yet sophisticated and cosmopolitan city built by a group of Native Americans who originally occupied much of the southeastern United States.